PETER BENNETT INTERVIEW REGARDING MARKET BASKET REVOLT

The unprecedented employee job action at non-union Market Basket supermarkets has caught the attention of the region and beyond. The ability of the Market Basket employees to organize themselves and their neighbors, and to do so without the assistance of a union, has great implications and possible consequences for employee organizing in both union and non-union workplaces. Because the National Labor Relations Board continues to assert itself as an arbiter of the rights and obligations of non-union employers vis a vis their employees' long held right to engage in protected concerted activity, this job action may well end up being litigated before the Board. Today, The Lawrence Eagle Tribune published a story in which Peter Bennett was extensively interviewed and quoted due to his expertise in successfully defending management before the NLRB and other agencies.
